

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A wireless LAN comprises an access point and plural mobile communications devices requiring data communication with the access point. A controller at the access point controls the supply of data communication to the mobile communications devices. The controller sets up a peer-to-peer connection between a first mobile communications device already receiving a data communication supplying a given service and a second mobile communications device requiring that service.